SEWER CLAIMS ATTENTION OF TINLEY BOARD

It was a busy evening for the Tinley Park village board Monday evening as various matters came up for consideration, among them being the proposition of a sewer system and sewer disposal plant for Tinley Park. Several board members have been investigating various types of sewer plants in use by neighboring towns, and reported that a chemical plant would be best for Tinley Park.

This plant would cost approximately $50,000 or more and would not include the sewer.

If this disposal plant is installed a new sewer system would also be necessary it is said. This would be an additional expense amounting to thousands of dollars.

The board recommended that an engineer be consulted about the entire proposition.

New Lenox Community Sale Draws Crowd

The opening sale of the New Lenox Live Stock Market held last Saturday on the J. C. Brisbane farm on the Lincoln Highway east of New Lenox was very well attended and bidding was spirited. Good prices were realized and many ready buyers were on hand. Some of the best buyers in the state were present at this grand opening sale.

There was a little shortage of live stock at this sale, but the promoters have the promise of much more live stock for the sale to be held this Saturday. The adv. in this issue consists only of early listings, but have promise of more.

With the co-operation of both the consignors and the buyers, the management is positive there can be established a good market in the New Lenox territory.

Electric Rate Reductions Mean Big Savings

Electric rate reductions for approximately 95 per cent of 250,000 domestic or residential customers of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois totaling more than $720,000 annually, were announced yesterday by James M. Slattery, chairman, of the Illinois Commerce Commission.

Most of the customers receiving reductions in three, four, five, six and seven room homes will have their monthly bills reduced in an amount ranging from 5 1/2 per cent to 8.8 per cent, with the latter reduction occurring most frequently. For example, a three room customer using 20 kw. per month would pay $1.36 under present rates and $1.24 under the new rates, a reduction of 12c or 8.8 per cent. A five room customer using 60 kw. hrs. per month would pay $3.63 under present rates and $3.40 under the new rates, saving of 23c or 6.3 per cent. Also a six room customer using 40 kw. hrs. per month would pay $2.72 under present rates and $2.48 under the new rates, a saving of 24c or 8.8 per cent, and such a customer using 80 kw. hrs. per month would pay $4.60 under present rates and $4.32 under the new rates, a saving of 28c or 6.1 per cent.

Most of the customers in eight, nine and ten room homes will receive reductions ranging from 8.8 per cent to 15 per cent, depending upon the amount of electricity used. For example, a nine room house using 200 kw. hrs. per month would pay $8.82 under the present rates, and $7.56 under the new rates, a saving of $1.26 or 14.3 per cent.

Savings for larger homes depend upon the amount of electricity used and the number of rooms. Since roughly 80 per cent of the company's customers live in homes of four to seven rooms most of the customers will receive reductions in their monthly bills from 1-12 per cent to 8.8 per cent.

Orland Heavies Defeat Tinley

Thursday March 3 the Orland Park heavies defeated Tinley Park by a score of 29-27. It seems that close games are in vogue with the Orland teams and this one was no exception. As the half ended the score stood at 11 all. At the end of the 3rd quarter the score was still even with 20 apiece. In the middle of the last quarter Tinley took a 25-24 lead. J Davidson tied it up with a free throw 25-25. With two minutes to go Orland shot two baskets and Tinley shot one just before the whistle ended the game. For Orland C Kay was high scorer with 8 points. For Tinley E. Uthe was the outstanding light with 15 points.

Monday March 7th the Orland Park heavies and the Brennan Gables lights, won two well played games from the Westmont heavies and lights. The Brennan Gables lights won by a score of 32 to 25. In this game the feature was the passing of the Brennans and the scoring was distributed fairly well among them all. The same can be said of the Westmont boys.

The Orland Park heavies won by a score of 35 to 28. In this game, the marksmanship of Hallinan kept the Orland boys ahead practically all through the game. He scored 9 baskets and 3 free throws for a total of 21 points. Girls was high man for Westmont with 9 points.

OUTFITTING CO. OPENS NEW RUG DEPARTMENT

Thumbing its way thru the colossal pages of a giant book, whose leaves are 9 by 12 foot rugs, Joliet and Will county homemakers of the future may get the full floor effect of their floor coverings, as a result of the inauguration of a new system by the People's Outfitting Co., of Joliet.

A rug alcove has been set aside for the convenience of shoppers, with easy chairs and davenport for the "gallery."

Hanging on rotary frames, perpendicular to the floor, and turning like the pages of a fascinating novel, are rugs whose patterns, texture, backs and prices may be examined without the audacious flapping back of floor coverings which characterized the old-time piling process.

Easy to View

Early American designs in colorful floral patterns, blocked into typical squares after the fashion of the coverings of American colonial homes, modern motifs in startling color combinations, American orientals, deep nap numbers in all the wanted designs and colors, all may be flipped thru by the prospective buyer.

An unusual variety of new patterns as well as the old favorites has been bound into the rug-book to salute the opening of the new alcove.

An addition, rolled samples of carpeting from which rugs may be made, or carpets purchased, are available in short lengths to demonstrate their effect upon the floor.

An Innovation

The rug revue is one of the most original and most interesting displayed in local furniture stores, and with spring housecleaning just around the corner, and rooms crying for fresh furnishings, the rug alcove with its revolving display of rugs and carpets, comes as the answer to a housewife's prayer.

The new rug department is but a part of the modernizing program just completed. Last year the building of a modern full sized "budget bungalow" on the first floor marked the beginning of this extensive remodeling. Now the second floor, together with redecorating departments for bedroom and dining room furnishings, is ready.

WHY NEW LENOX 5 HORSEMEN DO NOT SIGN NAMES

The New Lenox authorities still permit the slot machines to go round and round and the nickles and dimes go down, down, down, (but not into the players pockets.)

In answer as to why the names of the Five Horsemen were not signed to the item which appeared in last week's press, we wish to advise our citizens that it is essential we remain anonymous for the reason that by so doing we are in a position to get information which is of interest to all of us, and which we have a right to know.

If we were to make our identity known at present, it would defeat our purpose to bring to the citizens of New Lenox, facts which will help to make our town a place to be proud of.

We asked in our previous article, for the moral support of all decent people of New Lenox in any movement which may become necessary.

We find that our local authorities are taking this matter lightly and apparently intend to do nothing about it. In view of this, we now ask you, one and all, to ask your neighbor what they think, appeal to your church and school organizations and our many fine women's clubs in New Lenox. Ask them to notify the town board that we do not want these mechanical robbers any longer. Remember they were elected to represent us and if enough of us demand removal of these machines, they will have to do it.

We wish to impress upon the owners of the business places who operate these machines that this is no joke. We intend to keep at this until the public becomes conscious of the fact that the slot machine is a detriment to our community and not an asset as you would like to have us believe. We know our citizens are too intelligent to believe they are an asset and after giving the matter a little thought they will do their part toward having them removed.

We have been informed that one of the town officers who had slot machines in his place of business has had them removed. If this is true, we appreciate this official's spirit of co-operation in riding our community of the slot machine racket.

THE FIVE HORSEMEN.

CHAPTER XV —17—

Joyce sprang from bed, ran to a great rosewood wardrobe and snatched out her polo coat. As she slipped into it there came a knock on the door. Dirk opened. Don Jorge entered, led by Leonardo and closely followed by Lu and Adan. "You don't have to tell me what it was, Maxie," said Joyce. "Let's go to the roof."

Dirk and Leonardo, one on each side, fairly lifted Don Jorge along and presently the whole party emerged into the light of a late moon, climbing almost darkly into a star-spangled sky. They gathered in a huddle against the frontal parapet and waited in expectant silence.

"It's foolish to stand so close together," remarked Arnaldo presently, and as he spoke there came a flash, another boom, but no howling shell—only an earth-shaking thud and then an opaque column of dust where the flash had shown.

Silence again—a long silence, broken at last by Don Jorge. "Tell me, somebody, what you saw; I heard, but for the love of heaven, give me eyes."

"Let me speak," said Dirk. "Of course you know it's artillery, Maxie, but I can tell you more than that. It's howitzers—a battery of them—firing from the bottom of the barranca. Since the elevation even of a howitzer has certain inexorable limits, the first shell passed over us and the second—the one you just heard—hit the lip of the gorge. It's my bet there won't be another fired before daylight."

"Why not?" asked Don Jorge. "Because Dorado has to do one of two things, both of them difficult. He must either move the guns farther away along the bed of the barranca or remove the wheels to get a sharper angle, and dropping the carriage is a tedious operation."

"You know a great deal for one too young to have been in the war," said Don Jorge, comforted.

"Plattsburg," murmured Dirk.

"I—" He was interrupted by a carbine volley resulting in a splatter of bullets against the wall beneath them. They retreated in haste, all but Leonardo who hurried to the southern barranca to direct a counter offensive. Safe below, Joyce drew Dirk aside.

"Things look black, Dirk, and there's nobody I want to talk to but you—not even Maxie and certainly not Adan. Artillery, cannon—the one thing I can't answer!"

"It's a tough one," admitted Dirk. "I felt so sure," mourned Joyce. "Now I feel helpless and a fool." Suddenly she lifted her eyes to his face. "By the way, that bit about the battery of howitzers. Who told you? How did you know?"

"I guess you're no fool after all," said Dirk; "nothing gets past you." He took out the ambassador's letter and handed it to her. "Read that, Joyce; and it's bad news for me any way you take it. If I stay I'll have a black mark against me the rest of my life; if I desert you I'm a skunk—I'd smell in my own nostrils."

Joyce glanced through the letter, then read it again, word by word, phrase by phrase, the color in her cheeks steadily heightening. Her breath began to come quickly; suddenly she crushed the paper into a ball and held it in her closed fist as her wide eyes stared through Dirk and the wall beyond.

"Joyce, oh, Joyce," he begged, "don't take it like that! I'll write him, I'll—"

"Write to whom?" she interrupted sharply.

"The ambassador, of course."

"The ambassador?" said Joyce.

"Oh, that! Why, I wasn't even thinking of your part of it. Onelia," she breathed, "General Onelia!" Her brows gathered in a tight frown.

"Onelia wasn't minister of war when he sent me down here—ordered Pancho to drop me into the lion's den, and then clear out! There's something crooked, something I don't understand. Listen, Dirk, there's a perfectly good flivver, as you know, the other side of the barranca. I have the key to it. Tomorrow—today since it's almost dawn—you and I are going to Mexico City."

"You're crazy!" cried Dirk. "How are we going to cross the barranca—fly?"

"We'll ride around it—ten miles down and ten back."

"While Dorado and his men twiddle their thumbs?"

"Stop!" cried Joyce, her blue eyes almost black. "If you can't help, keep your mouth—Oh, Dirk, darling, I'm sorry. But our horses are faster—so much faster. Doesn't that make a difference? Doesn't it? There must be a way—there must!"

"Sweetheart, I was nearly a skunk, and now I'm surely a rat! But don't worry; I'm cured. Take a bath, eat, change into your riding togs. I'm off to sock a feed of oats into the horses."

"I love you when you talk like that," said Joyce. "I'm glad to promise I'll do exactly as you say."

except I must see Maxie first." Dirk was on his way before the words were out of her mouth and she turned into Don Jorge's study. "Maxie, there's a chance the guns won't get the range of the house at all. Even if they do, the one thing to look out for is fire. Fortunately there's lots of water and plenty of people to carry it. Do you think there's any reason I should stay?"

"Reason?" repeated the blind man, bewildered and a little shocked by what sounded like a threat of desertion. "No, senorita; it is well you should withdraw from danger."

"I?" gasped Joyce. "I withdraw from danger? Maxie, are you trying to make me laugh?"

Color swept into Don Jorge's cheeks and his sightless eyes watered at the corners. "Ah, chica, my beloved child, forgive a blind man for his mistake. Where is it you intend to go?"

"Mr. Van Suttart and I will start for Mexico City as soon as it's light enough to see."

Adan Arnaldo, who had scarcely listened and was sitting with head hanging despondently, suddenly straightened and rose to his feet. "Me, too!" he cried fervently. "But how?"

Their Riders Had Dared to Pass to the Northern Side of the Barranca.

"I'm sorry, Adan," said Joyce. "You're going to be terribly disappointed. You don't ride very well, and besides, there are only two horses fast enough to do the trick. Of course it will have to be a race of wits and speed between us and Dorado's outfit."

Don Jorge shook his head doubtfully. "Too far," he muttered. "Toluca is too far. You don't know our campesinos; they won't have to ride, they could walk you down."

Joyce hesitated whether to mention the flivver; of consideration for Adan, poor exile, she decided not.

"You'll have to leave it to us, Maxie," she said finally. "We'll surely find a way."

"Even so," said Don Jorge, "I don't understand. Say you do reach the city, what then?"

Again Joyce hesitated before she answered. "Maxie, by the ambassador's letter to Mr. Van Suttart, we know General Onelia has become minister of war."

"Onelia," murmured Don Jorge, frowning; then he cried out, "Onelia!"

"Yes," said Joyce; "perhaps—perhaps—" She stopped, her lips trembling.

Arnaldo moved forward and something in his pose seized her attention. Most men she had known threw up their heads when they came to some crucial decision, but not Adan—his sank between his shoulders. "It is good you should try to get to Mexico City, but don't go blind. Margarita Fonseca, General Onelia—you think you know them, eh?"

"Why, of course," said Joyce, but the sudden doubt in her eyes belied her words.

"No, no," said Adan. "I'll tell you. Together those two arrange to have Dorado driven out from La Barranca—yes. You think it is for you, but they leave you all alone, abandon you. Why? To make trouble for my friend, General Sebastiano, minister of war. It was almost certain you would get killed, but no matter to them. Even without getting killed it seems you've made enough trouble to put that old fox Onelia into Sebastiano's shoes."

"Oh!" gasped Joyce, cheeks and eyes flaming, "now I see it all! Thanks, Adan; you've cleared up the or point that was bothering me. Oh, I'll get even—I'll—" She broke off and her face, so illumined by emotion, hardened to a look of determination. "I need a cold bath. I've got to dress, eat." She hurried from the room.

The horses were saddled, Joyce and Dirk ready, but with the break of day came heartbreaking disappointment. It was Leonardo who brought the bad news. Descending from the ramparts he reported that Dorado's following had almost doubled overnight. That wasn't the worst of it; secure by reason of their numbers for the first time their riders had dared pass to the northern side of the barranca. Here was the picture: straight out from the eastern gate was the great ditch with the rope bridge gone and the howitzers, temporarily silenced, in its depths. Beyond—near and yet so far—was Pancho's abandoned flivver. What need had Dorado to guard that section? None. Had his men stayed on the south side, as had been their invariable custom, faster horsemen might have ridden around them, but he had been too clever. They had deployed on the near side of the chasm in two broad fans, well out of range, almost three miles to the east and west of the hacienda. There they waited like vultures for the moment when fire or ruin should drive its inmates into the open. Dirk turned away, not caring to see what must be in Joyce's eyes.

"Well," he murmured, "I guess the game is up."

"Wait," said Joyce. "Come here, Dirk. Come quite close, so nobody else will hear. Look in my eyes, Dirk. How far can a horse jump?"

He stared at her and the longer he looked the more did a bar of steel seem to form between her eyes and his. "I don't remember the record, Joyce," he said quietly, "but it's well over the width of the barranca at the spot where the bridge used to be. Shall I help you up?"

"Please," said Joyce.

He bent his knee and she mounted Rayo; an instant later he was astride Tronido. They tried to walk the horses across the great court and through the zaguan, but the mysterious seismograph of sympathy between horse and rider made the beasts toss their heads and mince sidewise toward the gate. Adan Arnaldo came running after them.

"Where are you going? What do you think you're doing?"

"Never mind, Adan," said Joyce. "Open the eastern gate, will you?"

"No!" shouted Arnaldo.

Joyce turned to Tobalito and raised her quirt. "Open the gate!" she commanded. "Open!"

He obeyed; the bar tumbled and one leaf swung back. Joyce was the first to rush through, Dirk hard at her heels; already they were at a full gallop—a near bolt. "Joyce!" he fairly screamed. "Stop! It isn't fair! For God's sake, Joyce, give the horses a chance!"

For the first time he laid quirt to Tronido. The gallant beast took it well. Seeming to sense what was wanted, he laid belly to ground and drew level on the right of Rayo just as the barranca came into full view. That was all Dirk asked. He began to ride Joyce off, slowly at first then with firmer pressure. Now they were galloping in a wide circle, giving the horses and themselves opportunity to steady down. Dirk could talk and be heard.

"That was a close call, Joyce; they wouldn't have jumped—they'd have ridden into the gorge head down. But now that they've had a chance to look at it, come on."

He whirled Tronido, headed him straight for the barranca and began to lift him with knees, hand and voice. Rayo was beside him, stride for stride. They rode together—he and Joyce were together. Out of the tail of his eye he felt rather than saw her figure, tense where it ought to be tense, light where it ought to be light, crouching into the saddle, passing its message of courage to the horse beneath: "Are you afraid? No. Neither am I!"

At 15 yards from the brink the horses seemed to get a first inkling of what was coming and at 20 a mysterious change took place in the rhythm of muscle and stride. They were gathering themselves, feeling the sod, digging in for the mighty leap. Then the rush—that peculiar hurtling where heart, muscle and bone make their bid to slap the impossible in the face. Thunder and Lightning—they hit the take-off side by side and soared. Joyce had a sensation of flying, abyss above, abyss below. Rayo's hind feet, everything gathered under, made the level with only half an inch to spare. He was over!

But not Tronido. Before Dirk had time to know terror he was conscious of dark blot in the chasm where it widened on the left—the guns—surrounded by a pale sea of upturned faces, fixed in astonishment. Then he knew, he saw what was coming. The blood in his veins turned cold, ceased flowing, as he felt the last vain wrench of the back between his legs. Tronido's hind hoofs missed the top by a full foot, but simultaneously his knees and chest crashed against it, catapulting his rider to safety as the great horse fell backward, screaming, to his death.

"Dirk, oh, Dirk!" cried Joyce. She reined Rayo down, turned and started to dismount.

"Don't! Don't get off!" shouted Dirk springing to his feet and taking a firm grip on her stirrup leather. "Ride for the flivver. Don't mind me; I know what I'm doing. You can't shake me at any pace, Ride!"

She headed eastward along the barranca but missed the gully she sought and had to turn back. It was Dirk, now on the other side, who spied the tattered top of the car. He let go, fell, rolled to his feet and shouted after her: "Joyce! Here we are! Come back!"

It took her almost a minute to turn the horse and in that time she caught two glimpses of many riders, one group converging from the east, the other from far to the west. Presently they would stream together in a single furious charge toward the one point Dorado had not dreamed he need guard. She dismounted, dug the key to the flivver from inside her glove and handed it to Dirk.

"We'll have to hurry," she said, "the riders are coming fast."

"Much good it will do them," he muttered as he switched on the ignition, "there isn't a horse in the bunch could make it."

"You're being a little stupid, dear, aren't you? Perhaps not a horse, but a bullet can. What shall I do with Rayo?"

Boulder Dam's Waters Effacing Old Salt Mine That Thrived as Far Back as 500 A. D.

Waters of Lake Mead, slowly piling up behind Boulder dam, are wiping out an industry which thrived as far back as 500 A. D., writes a Las Vegas, Nev., United Press correspondent.

The old St. Thomas salt mine, with its mountain of salt 300 feet high, said by scientists to have been worked by Pueblo Indians as early as the start of the Fifth century, is disappearing. Residents are wondering if the great pile of salt will contaminate the waters to any extent.

Several years ago the salt mine attracted scientists from afar when evidences were discovered that man, in the dawn of history, had engaged in industry there. Digging tools, fashioned from rocks tied together with leather thongs, were dug up. They proved, said archaeologists, that the mine was the base of one of the principal workings of the Pueblo Indians who inhabited the territory from about 500 A. D. until about 1200 A. D.

The more modern history of the mine started in our own early Western days when the first of the Bonelli family, emigrating from Switzerland, settled in the St. Thomas section and became influential in its development.

There the Bonellis, according to old timers, organized the Virgin River Salt company and operated the mine and a salt mill for many years. Finally the Virgin River company died, and the mine was worked intermittently by residents of the area. During the last few years thousands of tons of salt have been taken out.

The old mine lies at the base of the salt mountain, but the rising waters of Lake Mead have covered the road over which thousands of tons have been hauled through fourteenth centuries.

Shouting From Post to Post to Relay Messages

Until about 60 years ago, almost no use was made, for the purposes of communication at a distance, of the simplest, most direct, and most effective medium for the expression and transmission of thought—the human voice.

True, it is recorded that when the Persians invaded Greece, in 480 B. C., they established a line of sentinels who, by shouting from post to post, relayed messages between Athens and Susa in 48 hours. The ancient Gauls used a similar communication system for military purposes. Alexander the Great is said to have employed a gigantic speaking trumpet which could project the voice a distance of 12 miles. Other devices similar to the megaphone, and still others following the principle of the speaking tube, have been used from time to time.

But all of these were relatively ineffective in extending the normal range of the voice. Not until the invention of the telephone, in 1876, was the spoken word set free from the limitations of distance.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Trim Your Couch Cover in Contrasting Cord

IF SPRING is not in the air yet it soon will be. It is the season when every room in the house seems to need a lift. If your couch or daybed looks as though it has had a hard winter now is the time to give it a thought.

The couch of the type shown here may be made to fit into almost any decorating scheme if it has a smart and appropriate cover. The one shown here is ideal for a room with modern furniture or for one that follows no particular period. It would also give an interesting accent in a Colonial or provincial room. The cushions match the couch cover. A roughly woven navy blue cotton material is used and the seamlines are outlined with heavy cream colored cable cord. If you would like a gayer color scheme, use red cord with navy blue. Cream or yellow cord with brown material also makes an attractive cover.

A curved candlewick tufting needle such as is shown here at the lower right is good to use for sewing the cord in place. Thread about size 8 or 10 to match the cord should be used. The needle shown is really a medium size version of an upholsterer's needle which is another piece of sewing equipment that you will find useful if you like to renovate old furniture.

So often mystifying technical details stand in the way of making things that would add beauty and comfort to your home. It is with this in mind that Mrs. Spears wrote and illustrated her book, SEWING, for the Home Decorator. With clear sketches and text it explains the simplest and most professional methods of making new slipcovers, correctly styled curtains, difficult dressing tables, pleasingly proportioned lamp shades and dozens of other things that will give your rooms new charm and freshness. This book will save you many dollars. Readers wishing a copy may address Mrs. Spears, 210 So. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill., enclosing 25 cents (coins preferred) and a copy of the book will be sent postpaid, by return mail.

And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock
It should be kept in mind that the thing that is compared to a rock foundation for a house is the doing of the teachings of Christ, as opposed to the mere hearing of them. The contrast is not drawn between the man who makes Christ and His teachings the foundation of his life and the man who builds on something else. Contrast is between the hearer who hears and does aid the one who merely hears.
This house rests on the rock of acts performed; the other on the sand of things merely heard.
Is your house resting on the rock of acts performed?

STANDABILITY

A New Word in the Corn Field

Hybrid corn brings a new world to the English language. Language is a very changing structure and the more progressive a civilization the faster its language changes take place. Old words become obsolete but many more new words and terms are being added. This applies to farming as well as any other human activity.

A little thought shows us a great many new words have come into our individual sphere in the last twenty years. Many new terms have come with the common use of the automobile. Many of French origin. Electricity and medicine have added several thousand new words to the language and we have new meanings for old words. In farming for instance, the new use of the word "combine," "tractor," "rotary hoe," "disc" and "fallowator," for new tools. These are names of implements and we have names of new varieties that come into the language. For instance, the Baldwin apple, Grimm alfalfa, or a character of a plant or article, for example, "winter hardiness."

The word "hybrid" is not new, but its application to corn or the term "hybrid corn" is new.

Words become part of a language first, through common usage, and further, by their adoption by scientific groups in their official deliberations as new processes or new things are the outcome of invention, research and scientific endeavor but what we as farmers are most concerned with are the new terms that apply to the processes or activities we are engaged in.

Following the introduction and early usage of hybrid corn, and particularly with the later development of hybrids that had high phosphorous gathering capacity, we noticed the ability of these phosphorous foraging strains to withstand lodging and we have brought a new term into use: STANDABILITY, which is the particular ability of the plant to remain in an upright, erect position not only until maturity but for a continued time for harvesting.

In describing new features or characters, we most welcome a terse short term as distinguished from a sentence, and let us see how fittingly the term "Standability" describes the features and character of the corn plant that is so welcome and highly desired by corn growers, viz. to withstand disease, insects and remain in an erect position.

The term Standability is made up of two parts: "Stand" and then "ability," which together means "the ability to stand" but on further search of the accepted meaning of the word "to stand" we find in the Standard Dictionary "to stay in an upright position," "to endure." In the Century Dictionary: "to remain erect," "to withstand or endure without succumbing."

To withstand cold, disease, insects, drouth, heat during pollination, chinch-bugs, continued drouth, grass-hoppers, and finally cold nights. All of us recall that these were the hardships and vicissitudes that the corn plant of 1937 had to endure and withstand. When these plants in the fall with heavy mature ears remained erect as soldiers or sentinels, which, for instance, was so outstanding in the field appearance of Thomson's Top-Yield Pfister 366 along the Lincoln Highway in Frankfort Township, we appreciate the fitting application of this new English word in so aptly describing the virtues of a particular strain of hybrid from ordinary hybrids or ordinary strains of corn. We realize that the term "standability" has come to stay and will remain in common usage. We would rack our memories to find another word of recent adoption that had such fitting application and many of us in the future will on use of the new word "standability" in the memory of our first occasion of its use involuntarily associate it with Top-Yield Hybrid 366.

Tears for Funerals

Centuries ago in many lands, particularly Persia, the mourning of the death of a great man was often enhanced by having his horses, as well as his family and friends, shed tears during the funeral procession. The trick was accomplished, says Collier's Weekly, by placing mustard seed in the nostrils of the animals.

DONALD C. LANG CANDIDATE FOR PROBATE CLERK

Donald C. Lang, prominent Republican, and chief deputy probate clerk, filed his petition, a few days ago, seeking the Republican nomination for the office of Probate Clerk of Will County.

Milton T. Sonntag, present Probate Clerk, announced that he withdrew from the race in favor of Mr. Lang and that he intends to pursue private affairs.

Mr. Lang resides at 650 Whitley Avenue. He was born in Joliet and attended the local public and high schools. Lang saw service in the World War and is a member of the American Legion.

Don Lang is one of the best-liked and most prominent men ever to seek this office. It will be a privilege and an honor for his legions of friends to work and vote for this fine, upstanding citizen for the office to which he aspires.

Lang has never held a public trust office before, but has been chief deputy to Milton Sonntag for four years, and surely that is qualification enough. The past record of Mr. Sonntag is resplendent with savings made to the taxpayers and the people using his office, and Mr. Lang has in no small measure, been responsible for this fine record that he so ably helped Mr. Sonntag to acquire.

Mr. Sonntag states: "Don Lang, in my opinion, will make one of the finest Probate Clerks that this county has ever had. He has been a loyal and faithful worker in every respect, and I take this opportunity of wishing him success and also pledging him all the support that I, myself, and my friends can give to him."

When you go to the polls on April 12, remember the name of Lang stands for fair play, honesty, integrity and faithful service, and if you want this type of man in the office of Probate Clerk, Mr. Lang will greatly appreciate your support.

WHAT TO EAT AND WHY •

Food Provides the Key to Mental and Physical Power

You Can Be Strong, Beautiful, Wise, Rear Healthy Children Only If You Know How to Combine the Right Food Materials in the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York.

SINCE the world began, food has been man's first consideration. For it he has fought and died. To find it he has traveled over great continents and braved unknown dangers. His quest for food has changed the map of the world and colored the history of nations. But in all of these historic struggles, he has been motivated solely by the desire to get enough food to satisfy hunger.

Today, actual hunger is rare. But hundreds of thousands of people starve in the midst of plenty because they do not realize the tremendous power of food for good or for evil.

They do not realize that as a man eats, so he is, and that his choice of food materials gives or takes away the power to live vigorously—to think clearly—to feel warmly—to be strong, healthy and wise.

It can be truly said that your food is your fate. It has the power to shape your body—to make it strong and beautiful, or weak and ugly. It has the power to influence your language, your gait, your tone of voice, in short—your life. With the right food, life becomes a glorious adventure, for it increases your leadership, intensifies your magnetic qualities, strengthens your morale, and increases your physical defenses and resistance. Without it, one drags through miserable days—never realizing even half of his potential mental and physical powers.

Food—the Fuel of Life.

The human body is a machine, far more complex than any machine devised by the mind of man. Food is the fuel which runs this amazing machine. Food is also the material used to repair worn-out parts, and to keep the intricate mechanism in good working order.

The body machine cannot be run efficiently without proper food fuel any more than a car could be run without gas, or a house could be heated without oil, coal or wood.

Food also has the power to speed up or slow down the workings of the mind. It likewise influences the state of our nerves, the warmth of our affections, the type of characters we possess.

Finally, the power to have strong, healthy children is based on proper food. And nutritional scientists have discovered that the wrong food can even take away from us the greatest blessing that Nature has bestowed—our earthly immortality. For it can deprive us of the ability to bear children who will carry on after we are gone.

Six Groups of Food Substances.

What food substances are necessary to build and maintain top health—to develop the greatest physical and mental power?

1. PROTEINS which build and repair body tissues. These are found in such foods as milk, eggs, meats, fish, cheese and nuts.

2. FATS which yield heat and energy. The fats are represented by butter, cream, oils and the fat of meats.

3. CARBOHYDRATES—the starches and sugars. These also supply heat and energy, and are found chiefly in such foods as bread, potatoes, cereals and sweets.

4. MINERALS which build, repair, protect and regulate. Among the minerals which are absolutely necessary to health and vigor are calcium, phosphorus, iron, copper, iodine, sulphur, manganese, magnesium, sodium and potassium. These are found in varying amounts in milk, eggs, fruits, vegetables, whole grain cereals and meats.

5. VITAMINS which are necessary for body regulation, and as a protection against dread deficiency diseases. Six have been discovered to date—A, B, C, D, E and G.

6. WATER which is a part of all body tissue and must be present in order to have the other food elements function properly.

The ideal dietary is one that includes a correct proportion of the different food elements required to supply bodily needs without any of them being supplied in excess, or in insufficient amounts.

Danger in Omitting One Essential
To illustrate how important it is that not one of the necessary food substances be omitted, let me tell you how an eminent bio-chemist proved in his experimental laboratory, in one of our leading universities, that the difference between stupidity and genius depended upon the presence or absence of one vitamin.

He placed a pregnant animal upon a diet adequate in every respect, except that it lacked one of the six vitamins. As soon as her young were born and weaned, they were fed a completely adequate diet.

Then the scientist tested the mentality of the young animals. He wanted to find out whether or not their mental power had been injured in any way by the fact that their mother—during pregnancy—had been deprived of one vital food element. So he put them in a runway. To get out of this—and reach a tasty morsel at the other end—they had to make their way through a series of passages. He had already made this same test on the same type of animals born of properly fed mothers. He knew that it never took them more than 25 trials to learn their way out of the maze. Most of them had gotten out after 15 to 18 attempts.

But what lack of skill was shown by the animals whose mother had been deprived of proper food? The stupidity of these pathetic little creatures was unbelievable. Some of them never learned to thread the maze and reach their goal, even after as many as 250 trials. They were being given—at the time—everything that was necessary to their diet. But they had entered life with minds totally unequipped to cope with the world—because their mother had not been properly fed before they were born.

Food Can Make or Mar.

This is a striking example of the power of food to make or mar existence. I could cite hundreds of other laboratory experiments, many of which have been confirmed by clinical experience.

Nor is this power of food to affect mental activity confined to prenatal life. Even if a child enters this world with a strong body and a clear mind—the wrong food during childhood has the power to wreck health.

Investigation after investigation, by leading specialists throughout the country, has proven that a surprising percentage of retarded children—those who cannot keep up with their school grades—do not really have inferior minds. They only seem stupid because the action of their minds is clogged and slowed down by sluggish, under-fed bodies.

Physical fitness is a far greater asset than material possessions. For in times of stress and trouble, those who can stand up under the physical strain win the battle. For those who collapse, all is lost.

The Homemaker's Responsibility.
Every wife and mother is therefore faced with the tremendous responsibility of keeping her family mentally and physically fit.

Her husband must have the right kind of food in order to earn a living. Her own diet must be adequate and well-balanced if she is to have the energy, wisdom, and patience required of a mother at all hours of the day.

C. Houston Goudiss, outstanding food authority, author, and radio lecturer, author of "What to Eat and Why." He knows food from soil to serving, from table to tissue. Watch for his articles each week.

Her baby will not grow into a healthy man or woman unless he or she has the right nourishment from the moment of birth. And school children can't keep up with their classes without the right food.

If you will follow this series of articles, and put into practice the principles of correct eating that I advocate, I can promise that you will increase both mental and physical efficiency, and as a result, achieve greater health and happiness for every member of your family.

Each morning when you awake, a new life is ahead of you. Whether that day and the days to follow will be better or worse than those that went before, depends largely upon what you eat.

Within a few hours the bread, meat, vegetables and liquids that you swallow are transformed into your personality. They begin to think, feel and act. They become YOU. What was food yesterday, today is carrying on the important business of the world.

Each meal that you eat helps or hinders the efficiency and ease with which these various duties are performed. That is why it is true that as you eat, so you are. And that is why I say that three times a day, at your table, you SIT DOWN TO LIFE.

How Often Should Your Furniture Be Polished?

Housewives differ on the question of "when to polish their furniture." Some have no set time for it—polishing when they think of it—or when, casting a glance about, they decide that the furniture can "stand it." Others, polish every cleaning day—which ordinarily occurs once a week. Others dedicate but one day a year to this important procedure. And still others, polish the furniture in their home regularly, once a month. This last group is the largest—but their schedule is not sufficiently frequent. Furniture can not be polished too often! True, the outward benefit of the best oil polish—the luster—will last through a single week—and more—but this same polish, with its light oil base, preserves and "feeds" the furniture, revives it, prolongs its life! So that every application is highly beneficial to woodwork and the various pieces of fine wood in the home. Our advice, therefore, for the sake of endurance, as well as appearance, of your furniture, is "polish up" with a good oil polish at least twice a month!

Lesson for March 13

FEEDING THE HUNGRY

LESSON TEXT—Mark 6:30-44.
GOLDEN TEXT—Give ye them to eat.
Mark 6:37.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Fed a Hungry Crowd.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Boy's Part in a Great Miracle.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Sharing What We Have.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Providing for the Needs of All.

"My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus" (Phil. 4:19). Such is the assurance of God's Word. Countless Christians have proved it to be true that they may trust God to supply every need—temporal or spiritual.

The lesson for today first presents the disciples as they had come back from their preaching expedition and presented to the Lord Jesus a report of their stewardship in ministering the bread of life to the spiritually needy. He invites them to a place apart from the busy walks of daily life for a time of communion and rest. The multitude would not be denied, however, and follow our Lord to the desert place. Having taught them, Jesus has opportunity to instruct His disciples in the important ministry of supplying for those in need the bread for their bodies.

I. The Ministry of the Bread of Life.

Reports of accomplishments in the field of Christian work (although sometimes an earnest accounting of stewardship of service and money) are all too often prepared for the purpose of impressing men and seeking their financial assistance. The real report is the one which disciples make to their Lord. It concerns two vital points.

1. "What they had done" (v. 30). One of the temptations which face the preacher and teacher of Christian truth is to avoid unpleasant and difficult problems by simply proclaiming the truth and doing nothing about the outworking of that truth in daily living. It sounds very pious to say that we will present the Word and let it do its own work, but the Christian worker who evades his duty to deal at close grips with sin and disorder in the church and community has not discharged his responsibility to Christ.

2. "What they had taught" (v. 30). The second temptation of the preacher is to follow the specious reasoning of the modernist who says that it does not matter what a man believes, it is what he does that counts. The foundation of Christian character is Christian doctrine, therefore the disciple of Christ must know what to teach, and give account to the Lord for his teaching. Teaching and doing the commandments of God go hand in hand.

II. The Ministry of Daily Bread.

Jesus found no rest, for the multitudes followed Him to the other side of the lake. Ere long the evening approaches, and the disciples begin to be concerned about how this great multitude is to be fed. They follow the inclinations of the flesh and decide to solve the problem by asking Jesus to

1. "Send them away" (v. 36). The church has followed their example in dealing with the social problems of the people down through the years. The result is that being denied fellowship, comfort, and help by a church which was too busy building up a vast organization or a beautiful order of worship, the common people have responded to the appeal of political leaders who have provided a substitute for what the church should have given them.

Serious thoughts are these. It will not do for us to "send them away" from the church empty hearted and empty handed. Our Lord says—
2. "Give ye them to eat" (v. 37). Reckoning hastily on what a small boy had brought for his lunch (trust an alert boy to be ready!), the disciples soon demonstrate that it is impossible to feed this great throng. Logic is such a devastating thing when it operates apart from faith in God. They were absolutely right in their reasoning and in their calculations, but they had forgotten the one factor that really counted. Jesus was there, and Jesus is God, and God is omnipotent.

3. "He commanded . . . and they did all eat" (vv. 39, 42).

When God speaks all the limitations of the finite disappear, and the needs of men are fully met—with "twelve baskets full of fragments" left over!

Let those who labor in difficult places with limited resources take heart—and trust God.

Wisdom

Wisdom allows nothing to be good that will not be so forever; no man to be happy but he that needs no other happiness than what he has within himself; no man to be great or powerful that is not master of himself.—Seneca.

Are Women Better Shoppers than Men?

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electrical refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean—rugs, floors, bathroom tiling—and have energy left for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? Where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them—and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family. For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads the advertisements too!

FOTO-FEATURE

This Magician Makes Himself Into Gurgling, Babbling Brook Or a Terrifying Wind Storm

Fifty-three-year-old Joseph Delfino has been making movies realistic since 1928, but no one heard of him until FOTO-FEATURE visited the Delfino rendezvous, a crowded storeroom on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot in Beverly Hills, Calif. His "studio," the only one of its kind in the industry, furnished the moaning, howling, rumbling, roaring, crackling and hissing for "In Old Chicago," "Lloyds of London" and other productions, most recently for "Sally, Irene and Mary." To see Delfino placidly winding a crank at the left, you'd hardly imagine that a few weeks hence cinema audiences will sigh over the poetic sound made by a babbling brook. For that, precisely, is the noise this contraption sends into the motion picture microphone.

sounds like an elevated train or a roller-coaster. The panorama scene of his headquarters gives you an idea of the complicated job handled by this strange craftsman.

After making queer noises all day, it's nice to sit before the fireplace in your West Los Angeles home, reading while the wife does a bit of needlework. Delfino thinks up a lot of new sound effect gadgets at home, but has also found time to build more than half the furniture for this cozy cottage. He and his wife personally decorated the house.

Above our hero is seen reading a script of "Sally, Irene and Mary," the new Fox production. From this script he prepared an advance work sheet for special sound effects, then collaborated with the sound recording engineer and assistant director on what was needed before work started.

This done, he goes into the kitchen (left) and dons an apron, turning out tastier "grub" than his wife. At least that's Delfino's story. And on Sunday they go strolling.

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

SPINNER
WASHER

Have you ever thought of washing clothes with out a wringer?

Do it the new Westinghouse way.

Westinghouse "natural" washing action is thorough washing action

The famous Westinghouse French-type turbulator gets clothes cleaner with less wash-water. The "sediment zone" traps dirt and grit. That's why clothes washed the Westinghouse way have such a bright color.

And a Westinghouse Spinner Washer actually washes, rinses, damp-dries an average washing in an hour — damp-dries one load while another is being washed. Tub empties automatically through turret.

Let us explain the other plus-value features of the Westinghouse Spinner Washer, and show you the entire line of gleaming white Westinghouse Matched Washers, priced right, styled right for you.
